WARREN LELAND,
whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.
Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.
Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.
Mr. LELAND has personally used for Rheumatism, with entire success, and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Boils, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.
We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him, personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.
Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled specific for blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

The Davis Patent does away with Turning Works or Sapper, as it is provided with three sets of collars and sapping knives on the saw arbor, and saps the bolt at the same time it is sawing. The arbor extends across the Machine, and the saw is outside of the frame, which prevents the saw-dust from clogging the gearing; and, in changing saws, you simply take the nut off and pull saw, and remove collars and saw without disturbing arbors.
The saw runs 2200 revolutions per minute, and the Machine will cut from 5 to 6 M. per day, an average of 500 per day over the old style machine.

STATE NEWS.

Androscoggin.

The Lewiston Gaslight Company pays a semi-annual dividend of 3½ per cent.

The lightning struck the residence of Mr Gurney, in West Auburn, in a heavy thunder shower of Friday. The servant girl in the kitchen was thrown down by the shock. The lightning struck near the chimney and shattered it. The same house has been struck once before by lightning.

The body of Joanna Cowley was found lifeless on the floor of Mrs John Manning's house, Lewiston, Sunday afternoon. The woman was about sixty years of age. She had been at work in South Lewiston, and had walked from there to Lewiston, Sunday morning, remaining in the house while the rest of the folks went to church in the afternoon. When they returned, she had fallen from her chair and life had passed away. The physician was called Monday morning and a coroner was summoned, and J. T. Sunill visited the house. No inquest was deemed necessary. The physician ascribed the death to heart disease.

Cumberland.

A reception was given to Mr Henderson, "the Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock," by the boys and girls of Portland, Tuesday evening. Governor Robie presided. City Hall was crowded.

F. W. Davis, the bow oar of the Bowdoin crew at Worcester, has been awarded the Goodwin prize for the best written commencement part, and also first prize for extemporaneous composition.

April 15th the house of Rev. Mr Lewis in Gorham, was entered, and various articles stolen. Two weeks ago Detective Davis took the case in hand. He made a search and found a considerable quantity of the stolen property in Feeney's trunk. Mr Davis got his clue from a remark made by Chadbourne, one of the boys arrested for a similar mischief.

Preparing the new time-table of the Boston & Maine Railroad involved an immense amount of perplexing work. Forty-five time tables of other roads, including maps and steamboat time tables, had to be examined in order to make the connections all right. General Passenger Ticket Agent D. J. Flanders, and assistants, worked quite a number of nights until twelve o'clock in addition to the day work, while the table was in process of being made up. The forty-fifth table are now being prepared.

The boys arrested in Gorham on charge of malicious mischief, were brought before Judge Gould in the Municipal Court at Portland, Tuesday. Eight of the boys pled guilty, the other, John Feeney, pleaded not guilty and standing trial. He was found guilty. Sentence was imposed as follows: John Feeney, thirty days in jail, ten dollars fine, appeal. Wm. Feeney and J. Scott Jewett, thirty days in jail and ten dollars fine. Frank Floyd and Michael Doherty, ten dollars fine; Eugene Floyd and Edward Kane, five dollars fine, the costs to be divided among the seven in equal proportions. Sentence was suspended in the cases of Milton Chadbourne and Henry Whitney, the youngest of the boys, during good behavior.

John T. Middlemore, Esq., of Birmingham, England, was in Portland, Tuesday. This gentleman has spent a large fortune in England, in taking young boys and misses from the streets, then educating them and providing them with comfortable homes. Dr. C. A. Foster, who is intimate with the gentleman, says he has provided over five hundred of these waifs with an education and home, and in all these children, only one girl and five boys have failed to make good citizens. Mr. Middlemore is looked upon as a public benefactor in his native country. He left for Montreal, Tuesday afternoon.

Tuesday, a young man named Howard Rolfe, at work in Shaw, Godfing & Co.'s boot and shoe factory, was in the act of pulling a box on to the elevator in the upper story. He did not notice that the elevator was at the first story, and fell. He caught the two wire ropes which support the elevator, but lost his hold when he nearly reached the bottom, when he struck on the top of the elevator, bruising one hip and sustaining other injuries; but as far as doctors could determine, no bones were broken and the young man was not apparently seriously injured. It was miraculous that he was not killed, as the distance was sixty-five feet. His grabbing the rope was what saved his life. He was taken to his home.

Kennebec.

The subscriptions received in Augusta for the statue of Liberty, amount only to $1.50.

A house and barn owned by Mrs. Kalle C. Pinchi, at South Monmouth, were burned Sunday. Loss $500; insured.

A leading physician says that Augusta is unusually healthy the present season. Summer complaint, so fatal to children, has been hardly known.

The dragging in the river for the body of Samuel Towns, who was drowned at Augusta, Monday, was continued Tuesday, by men and boys in boats, but their efforts were unavailing and the body was not found.

An attempt to enter the store of Burr Bros., at New Mills, Gardiner, was made Monday night. Thirty-one sugar holes were bored in the sash but the dog frightened the robbers away. No clue has yet been obtained.

For some time past the springs and reservoir of the Devine Water Co., of Augusta, have been meddled with and the water disturbed so as to injure it for use. It was kept up to such an extent that it was necessary for the company to employ a man to watch the springs. About a year ago Mr. James Devine was enjoined by the Supreme Judicial Court from troubling the water, and recently he was again brought before the court and the injunction restraining him from damaging the water, made perpetual.

Lincoln.

The Squirrel Island Squid, one of the much-to-vacation papers of the state, makes its first appearance for the season next Saturday.

Penobscot Valley Ministerial Association.

The first session of the year was held at Hampden, June 29-July 1st.

Anticipations of a large gathering were disappointed by the rain, that, for other reasons was most welcome. Members were delayed, and those most remote hindered from coming. Nevertheless, for spiritual and intellectual, as well as social reasons and results, these thinly-attended services brought pleasure and profit.

Rev. A. J. Lockhart, of Orrington, preached on Monday evening from Prov. 14:12.

On Tuesday, at 2 P. M., enough members were present to effect an organization. Rev. G. R. Palmer led devotional services, after which Rev. W. T. Jewell was chosen chairman, and Rev. A. J. Lockhart, Secretary.

After some preliminary business the essays were called for in the order of the Programme, and first, was read a paper entitled "Prayer and Temporal Blessings—The Relation of One to the Other," by Rev. G. R. Palmer, which was clear, strong and pointedly written, and forcibly read. It was liberally reviewed and discussed by the members present. Rev. J. W. Alexander, pastor of Congregational Church being present, was introduced, and addressed the Association. Bro. Dunn, who never fails to call for smiles, spoke on the subject of the paper.

Rev. Amos Prince, presented a finely written essay on "The Standard of Intelligence Demanded in our Ministry." It abounded in weighty thoughts and pregnant sentences, and its eloquent conclusion impressed all who heard it. The brethren present participated generally in discussion of the subject under consideration in the essay.

Rev. A. S. Ladd, of Bangor, preached in the evening, a short, ringing, practical sermon, on the noble Bereans, from Acts 17:11, which was followed by several exhortations, warm and stirring, like the sermon.

Wednesday morning the Association was continued with devotional services, conducted by Rev. J. P. Robinson, of Orono, who presented, shortly after, an interesting paper entitled, "Warren Versus Genesis," giving a synopsis of about one third of the Dr's remarkable book. The essay, which was well received, opened the way for severely absorbing discussion of the suggested theme, in which Bros. Marsh, Ladd, Walker and others participated.

Fragmentary essays were read by Rev. A. J. Lockhart, on the "Early Life of Saul of Tarsus," and by Rev. W. T. Jewell, on "the Piety of To-day—How does it compare with the Piety of the Past?" The latter furnished a multitude of hooks on which nearly all present hung their ideas in some bright ones, too.

At 2 P. M., Rev. W. W. Marsh of Brewer, preached from 1 Tim. 4:16, a sermon rich in gospel and poetry, such a sermon as made us "glad and sad,"—filled us with awe and love,—a sermon odorous with myrrh, and aloes and cassia, out of the ivory palaces." Exhortations followed, and after a short session the Association adjourned to meet at Brewer sometime in the month of October following.

Invitations were given from churches in Dover, Bangor, Brewer, and Orono, which open hopeful prospects for future meetings of the Association. Among the members present who did not present essays, and yet who added very much to the interest and profitableness of the occasion, were Rev. A. S. Ladd, Rev. W. W. Marsh, Rev. R. L. Nutton, of Surry, and Rev. Bro. Walker.

Brethren let us appear in full force at the October meeting.

ARTHUR J. LOCKHART, Sec'y.

Much Like Mr. Crowley.

WONDERFUL WAYS OF A BERLIN GORILLA—WHAT HE ATE AND DRANK—HIS SAD END.

The customary crowd was gazing at Mr Crowley, the chimpanzee, in his quarters at Central Park, New York, when Superintendent Conklin joined the throng. Mr. Crowley recognized his face, and clamored child-like, to get at him, and when finally allowed to do so jumped into the genial superintendent's arms and nestled down into them with a little cry of gladness. The lookers-on were astonished, and the reporter asked if such human-like little fellow had ever been seen before in captivity.

"I have never seen one," replied Mr Conklin, "and the interest manifested in him by visitors surprises me. Scores of people every day came to inquire how he was doing when he was ill, and hundreds asked about him at the monkey-house. It may be interesting to you," continued the superintendent, "to hear about another monkey just as wonderful as this one. Here is a gentleman who knows of one." The reporter was introduced, and asked his new acquaintance to tell all he knew.

"My story," said the gentleman, "is about a wonderful and distinguished gorilla, named Pongo, who lived and died in Berlin. At least I know he lived there, and I believe he died there. Pongo was born in Africa about the year 1873, and was captured when very young by a Prussian scientific expedition and taken to Berlin. I saw him when he was only three years old, and a wonderful young fellow he was. He was as much a man as Crowley is, like Crowley, extremely human-like. He lived with a family in a large house, where he was fed with a soft, chopping-bowl, and learned to do many things correctly. Pongo used to go to bed regularly, lying down at about 10 o'clock, and always tucked himself up in a blanket. He would not go to sleep until he went to bed, and he felt like being tucked in. He would put his arms around his keeper's neck and lay his head on his shoulder, sighing in that position for a minute. He would get up about eight o'clock in the morning, yawn, and drink a glass of milk with his breakfast in his short, fat, chubby fingers. About an hour later he would take a cup of milk to most children's tea, and recently he was again brought before the court and the injunction restraining him from damaging the water, made perpetual.

Hon. Aliah Doe, of Parsonsfield, died Saturday, aged 79 years and 10 months. He taught school for more than thirty years, and was eminently successful. The various offices of honor and trust in that town he had most acceptably filled, and had also been a member of both branches of the Maine Legislature, serving in the Senate in 1863. He was one of a family of twelve children, and he died at one of seven sons, three of whom are living, men of very large possessions, and residents of San Francisco, Cal. He leaves a widow and four sons.

FRIDAY, JULY 10, 1885.

The President is about to take to the woods to get rid of the office-seekers.

Judge Forker's speeches in the Ohio canvass thus far are acknowledged to be superior in clearness and force to those which surprised the Republicans two years ago.

Congressman Holman's plan for capturing the next Senatorship from Indiana by a free distribution of federal patronage has, it is said made him a few friends and many powerful enemies.

Whitelaw Reid editor of the New York Tribune, has offered to give $50,000 for the founding of a college at Cedarville Ohio, near which place he was born. If the citizens will increase the amount to $200,000.

Secretary Manning states that neither Higgins nor Auditor Chenowith have been requested to resign. Of course not, they are both good reformers from the standpoint of the present Administration only they are a little too frank.

The Boston Advertiser in speaking of the suspension of Postmasters Barker and Banks says: "If the new postmasters appointed for Portland and Biddeford, in Maine, keep more clear of reasonable suspicion of offensive partisanship while in office than those who are suspended have done, it is safe to say they will disappoint all expectation based upon their previous conduct. But they must do it or the Administration will be convicted of removing Postmasters Barker and Banks (whose honesty and efficiency are not complained of by any one) unnecessarily and simply to give Democrats office."

The special returns of the Boston Journal, gathered in the three New England States in which hay being of the most, if not the most, important product, indicate an unusually light crop. The falling off is not so great in Maine as in New Hampshire and Vermont, but over 15 per cent is no small loss. In New Hampshire the falling off is 11½ per cent compared with the crop of 1884 and 57 per cent compared with that of 1883. In Vermont the falling off is over 29 per cent compared with the average crop of the last ten years. There is very little old hay in these States to make up the deficit.

Vice President Hendricks who has just returned to Washington is reported as criticising some of the recent appointments of the President, particularly that of ex-Representative Lamb to be District Attorney for Indiana. Mr Hendricks says that Holstein, the man removed, was one of the brightest men in the State, an efficient and capable officer, and should not have been disturbed. If it was determined to appoint a Democrat, Lamb was not the man who should have been selected as in the redistricting of the State which has just been accomplished particularly for Lamb's benefit, he was sure to be returned to Congress at the next election. Mr Hendricks thinks this appointment was not for the best interests of the Democratic party in Indiana.

In connection with the political situation in New York the Tribune says: There is not much talk yet about candidates on the Republican side. Among the prominent names is that of Judge Noah Davis, who, for his ability, integrity and well known temperance views is regarded with much favor by the politicians. He would escape any criticism of being nominated for his money, said a leading Republican leader yesterday, "and at the same time he is so well known throughout the State that no one would have to ask who he is. While he is an advocate of temperance principles and would get the vote of every honest temperance man, he is not an extreme prohibitionist, and would not turn votes away on that account. I believe he would be the best and strongest man we could nominate, providing that he would accept the nomination. Another candidate well spoken of is Andrew D. White of Cornell University. He is not a candidate in a sense of asking the office, but his friends in this city believe that he would accept if nominated. Some of the Brooklyn Republicans are talking of bringing out Congressman Darwin R. James. The Ontario County Republicans have a candidate in Judge James C. Clark of Canandaigua. The name of Senator Fourth is frequently mentioned, as are also those of James W. Wadsworth and Congressman Ira D. Davenport. Another name mentioned by interior Republican newspapers is that of Gen W. H. Seward, of Auburn. There seems to be a general disposition, however, to wait and see who the people want, without attempting to form public opinion in favor of an particular candidate.

Land Commissioner Sparks has been in a condition next to frantic ever since the publication of Secretary Bayard's opinion on the Maxwell and grant, which was so contrary to the expressions of his own report to Secretary Lamar, says a Washington despatch. The fact is there was no call whatever for this report except that he wanted to make himself conspicuous in the reform Administration, and having determined to hit something, struck at the first head he found. The suit brought by Mr McVeigh, involving the Maxwell question, is still pending. Its determination Mr Sparks could not doubt would be in accordance with the law and the facts. But he did not think of that, and consequently put himself, Secretary Lamar and finally Secretary Bayard in a ridiculous position. The Maxwell case has always been considered a test one. On the suit now pending some seventy or eighty similar cases are pending. The attorneys defending these cases were outraged at Mr. Sparks's partisan attack, but they promptly recovered when Mr. Bayard's opinion came out and took advantage of it to force from the excited and dumbfounded Land Commissioner a suspension of hostilities and an agreement to abide the result of the suit, and certainly to take no action of any kind until the return from Amsterdam of an attorney who went there to consult with the Dutch syndicate that owns the grant as to their intentions and wishes. Thus from the savage leader of an onslaught on the "land rings" as he terms them, Mr. Sparks has been reduced to a condition of pliable quiescence. Mr. Lamar is said to be a party to the agreement with the attorneys, which includes a pledge on both sides to seek an early legal settlement of the issue.

As made up by John B. Clarke, clerk of the House of Representatives, the roll of the House stands as follows: Republicans, 189, Democrats, 180, Greenback Republicans, 1, Greenback Democrat, 1, vacancies, 4.

Administration of "Cant"

[Buffalo Commercial Advertiser]

Mr Cleveland has, in a word, conducted the presidential office precisely as he did the mayoralty and the governorship intrusted to him—as a public trust, not as a party agency. And for doing what ought to have been expected of him as an honest man by an honest party, he is to-day the subject of covert sneers in Democratic journals and to a growing hostility among the politicians of his party.—Boston Herald.

Reform is not "cant," if it were, then the present Administration could truthfully be praised for having inaugurated an era of "reform." The people were ready for "reform" they were deluded into thinking that "reform" would follow the "change" which put the Democratic party at the head of the Government, but the people can not be coaxed into accepting the pinchbeck of "cant" for the pure metal of "reform," though President Cleveland seems to be laboring under the impression that they can be.

Were he to come out honestly and say "I have been entrusted with the running of the 'machine,' and I intend to run it for the benefit of the Democratic party. I find Republicans in office, I intend to put Democrats in their places, the Democrats would be better satisfied, Republicans would have more respect for him. Republicans and Democrats both are disgusted with the 'cant' that attempts to explain the removal of Republican office-holders on the ground of "offensive partisanship," thereby implying that a Republican office-holder who is not and has not been an offensive partisan will be allowed to remain. The facts are that the warrant for the official execution of every Republican has been made out, and sooner or later to the guillotine he must go.

The Commercial has not said one word against President Cleveland for putting Democrats into the places of Republican office-holders, it expected he would do this. But the Commercial does protest against the profession of "pure motive" and "official integrity," with which President Cleveland removes the Republicans, pretending in the words of the Boston Herald that he is conducting the Government as a public trust and not as a party agency.

Take a recent case with which Buffalo readers are familiar. Mr. Fleming is removed from the office of appraiser in this district. He has been a Republican and for that he is removed, for nothing else. During his tenure of office Mr. Fleming has taken the ground that as a federal official he had no right to be an active politician, and to that rule and policy he has strictly adhered. No influence could swerve him from that position. If the Mugwumps of Boston, Brooklyn and New York do not believe this statement let them ask the Hon. Sherman S. Rogers, of Buffalo, who is Mr. Fleming's partisan offensive or defensive. It is not disputed that Mr. Fleming has been a model official—that he is the most ably skillful in discharge of the duties of the appraiser's office, and for five years had a splendid record at Washington. Why then is he removed.

The Buffalo Courier does not protest that the removal is for cause. It says in effect that Mr. Gatchell, who steps into Mr. Fleming's place, has been a good working Democrat and deserves recognition from a Democratic Administration. So be it. Explain Mr. Fleming's removal on that ground and not a word will the Commercial say in protest, but do let there be an end to the lush, gush and mush about reform and offensive partisanship, and about the conduct of the Administration as a public trust and not a party agency when every man in this part of the State old enough to be a voter knows that Mr. Fleming was turned out and Mr. Gatchell put in in order that a Federal official who would not be a working politician might give place to a man who can be rallied upon through thick and thin fair weather and foul, darkness and daylight and every day in the week, as a "party agent." The people know the genuine article of "reform" when they see it, and cant and so that disgusts them.

The Schemes of the Free Traders.

[Boston Traveller]

Many careful students of the causes which have led to the present depression in trade and business have ascribed as the leading one the agitation of the tariff question which has been going on with greater or less persistency now for three years, and no impartial student of the trade and business situation can deny that the agitation of this question has been one of the important influences that has led to the current stagnation. The 18th Tariff was elected upon the issue of revenue reform as one of the most important of the campaign of 1882 but hardly was the result of the elections of that year known, than the alleged revenue reformers threw off all reserve and became clamorous to take decided and "firm" steps in the direction of free trade.

From that time until a little more than a year ago when the Morrison horizontal reduction tariff bill was defeated in the House of Representatives by only the narrowest majority the industrial interests of the country were constantly menaced. The danger was a real one, as the vote on Mr Morrison's absurd bill showed and as capital is proverbially timid, by the time the danger had been temporarily averted the mischief had been done in destroying confidence, thereby in turn destroying credit, and involving the industrial and commercial interests of the country in disaster. The turn in the tide seems to have been reached, the process of liquidation which necessarily accompanies periods of depression to have been finished and now to all merchants are beginning to look forward to a revival of business and trade, they are met again with this old free trade menace which has previously been the cause of so much disaster.

A powerful free trade lobby is being organized for aggressive operations at Washington, and simultaneously with the announcement of this fact comes the further announcement that Mr Morrison is preparing another free trade reduction measure, and is getting ready for an assault upon the tariff all along the line, early in the session of Congress. There is evidence that the free traders in Congress, the Cobden Club agents, and the importing interests, are in harmonious co-operation, and are quietly working together on a common plan and understanding, and with a common purpose. They regard a Democratic House of Representatives and a Democratic Administration as furnishing favoring conditions for free trade agitation, and they will improve the occasion to the utmost.

It would seem as if the two years and more of business depression, directly traceable in large measure to tariff agitation, should have made even the most reckless of the free traders hesitate, but on the contrary it seems to have inspired them with greater determination, and it may be with perfect safety predicted that every influence hostile to the American tariff system will be rallied for a herculean assault at Washington. What increases the danger and makes it the more threatening is that efforts are being made by the free traders to secure an alliance with the silver extremists of both houses. It is not to be forgotten that the Democratic free traders appear to be willing to go to any extreme of reckless hardihood whenever they see an opportunity of reaping even a temporary and fleeting advantage. They evidently hope by joining forces with the silver extremists to be able not only to carry their tariff schemes through the Senate, but also to overcome any executive opposition that may exist.

The fact that there has been manifested a disposition on the part of some of the Democratic opponents of silver coinage to look with favor upon the recent silver compromise proposed by Mr Warner, of Ohio increases this hope, though a careful study of the modification of the silver law proposed by Mr Warner shows that it retains all the offensive and dangerous features of the law and would very likely in case it passed be powerful for mischief. On the whole the danger that threatens our tariff system is a serious one, and it is heightened by the indifference with which the masses of the people seem to regard it. Whether the battle that is surely to be fought at Washington when Congress assembles shall be won for protection, depends very much on the attitude of the people toward the tariff question in the meantime. What is needed is that the friends of American industry and of the American laborer should be aroused and shall see to it, at the polls, that the duplicity and the unscrupulous methods of the free traders are met with the sturdy and emphatic protest of the masses of the people.

This, with the reserve on the policy, is paid to the assured either in some form of new assurance or cash as he may elect. Some people think anything they get from away, is superior to the home production, but there is a mistaken notion, at least as far as pictures are concerned, therefore I send no plausible excuse for sending pictures away to be copied, when they can be done better and cheaper, (nine times out of ten) at home. I will match my work and prices against any copying house in the country and leave the public to abide the result.

An Antidote Against Poverty.

In this age of speculation when men are not satisfied with most safe profits, seek immediate wealth, the risks of business are never largely in excess of the profits. To be successfully now, men must take great risks, neither idleness nor gambling nor industry, neither long days nor sleepless nights, improve chances from bringing losses nor losses from improving chances, nor bank failures from careful solicitude about the future of depositors' funds. This anxiety can be guarded against only by life insurance which indemnifies and provides for the only contingency which the man of business cannot in some other way overcome or avoid—the contingency of death before recovering from poverty. The CONNECTICUT MUTUAL LIFE will insure such a life on the NEW CONTRACT at the office of H. N. FAIRBANKS, Gen'l Agent, 21 MAIN STREET, BANGOR, ME. July4 eod

There was an unusual scene in the Supreme Criminal Court this morning the result of which will attract the attention not only of members of the legal fraternity but of all citizens This week has been devoted to the trial of liquor cases brought forward on the evidence of Messrs. Snow and Gignac, two of the employes of the Law and Order League Six cases in succession came before the two juries and though the evidence of the agents was almost in the arguments of the Assistant District Attorney so forcible and logical as to call forth much favorable comment, still the juries acquitted four of the defendants, and Judge Aldrich stopped the court, refusing to allow any further cases of a similar character to come up, on the ground that it would be useless since the juries were determined not to accept the testimony of the two agents

BRUTAL THUGS

A Woman Bound and Robbed in Chicago

CHICAGO, July 9 The most daring and audaciously executed robbery that has taken place in Chicago for a great many years was committed yesterday afternoon at No 59 Fifth place court, the residence of Thomas Smith head draughtsman in the employ of Dearborn's foundry When her husband returned to work after dinner Mrs Smith was left alone in their rooms A ring at the bell called her to the front door Two men dressed as mechanics introduced themselves as plumbers sent by the landlord

Mrs Smith entirely unsuspicious of anything led the way to the kitchen. Suddenly one of them struck her a terrible blow with his fist, which caused her to fall on her knees Before she had time to cry out her assailant's fingers were fastened on her neck Then the other man drew a long rope from a sack which he carried and proceeded to bind her feet and hands. A towel was drawn tightly across her mouth and both ends tied together at the back of her head The robbers then tore open the bosom of Mrs Smith's dress and got hold of a wallet containing $10 30

A moment's consultation followed and then the would-be murderers quietly went out of the front door, closing it after them and leaving Mrs. Smith upon the floor bound hand and foot and almost dead from fright. Half an hour elapsed before she regained strength enough to attempt to loosen the bonds about her wrists This task took another half hour, and then, dragging herself on her knees, she finally reached the front door. A passer by was informed of what had taken place and the police notified. Up to this morning the latter have obtained no clue to the criminals

[From Belgravia.]

Philip Dell was a retired tea importer of very ample means. He was a bachelor, and was troubled neither by domestic nor business cares. Most men living alone and without family ties, would have felt life to be somewhat wearisome, but Dell had no fault to find with this world. The secret of his great happiness was that he had a hobby, and was able to ride it to his heart's content. He was a connoisseur and collector, not of paintings, bric-a-brac or china, but of fiddles. He possessed over two hundred violins, which he had hunted for and purchased in almost every corner of Europe.

When in trade, Dell had been a renowned tea taster; but in the opinion of those best able to judge, he was not equally qualified to test the merits of a violin. The consequence was that he had been grossly imposed on, and had spent several thousand pounds in acquiring a number of instruments of little or no value. The conviction that his judgment in this matter was not infallible had at last dawned upon Dell himself, and he was now very chary of adding to his collection. Indeed, so far as numbers went, he might well have been satisfied, for one room in his house was opened, the fiddles hanging in his hall first attracted your notice, and there was scarcely a room in his house in which they were not conspicuous.

Now, though Dell was aware that he had frequently bought valueless instruments under the impression that they were Stainers, and that on more than one occasion he had given nearly one hundred pounds for some old fiddle which turned out to be a Klotz, worth about five or ten pounds, it must not be supposed that he was dissatisfied with his collection. Far from it. He had no reason to be so, as he was the happy possessor of one gem of the first water, which was able to redeem even its companions from insignificance by conferring celebrity upon their owner.

By some fortunate chance Dell had acquired a remarkable due Stradivarius, a genuine instrument of magnificent tone, which many competent critics affirmed to be the finest specimen known of the great master's handiwork. There was no doubt whatever about the authenticity of this famous violin, as it had been played on by many of the most celebrated performers in Europe, who, when they came to London, had sent an introduction to Mr. Dell that they might inspect his matchless Cremona. To do Dell justice, on such occasions he was always very willing to afford the curious the gratification they sought.

Time after time he had been offered five hundred pounds for his Cremona, and one wealthy virtuoso had been eager to buy it at a price very far exceeding that sum, but the owner never for a moment entertained any of these proposals.

Dell, himself in more than easy circumstances, used to listen with a certain grim amusement to those who thought that five hundred pounds would be an inducement to him to part with that possession which gave his life its greatest value.

Though it would have been otherwise inferred by any one entering his house, Dell was no musician, he did not even possess an ear, and merely by his sense of hearing could not have distinguished between Joachim performing on the Cremona and some amateur scraping on one of his cracked Klotzes. Why, one who was destitute of all soul for music, should still find his greatest pleasure in treasuring an instrument which could produce ethereal strains, may perhaps be explained by those more deeply skilled in psychology than the present writer.

In this respect Dell presented a striking contrast to his cousin, Tom Hopkins, who, for an amateur, was very fair performer on the violin. Tom's skill as a musician however, was not on par with his station, and though he practised hard he did not rise above mediocrity. Unlike many amateurs, he had formed no false estimate of his proficiency. He was aware that he never received a single encore from those whose judgment could be valued, and though he was a very acceptable visitor at several suburban villas, where he occasionally called in the evening carrying his violin with him, he did not attach much weight to the plaudits of the maiden members of these households, for he was a well-to-do widower, and more than commonly suspicious of attempts to deprive him of his restored liberty.

As he grew older, Hopkins seemed only to become more attached to his favorite pursuit, and grudged neither money, pains nor time in order to acquire the skill which he had little to boast or denied him.

Tom was one of those who coveted his cousin's famous Cremona. He had frequently tried to obtain it by offering the owner an almost fabulous sum for it. Hopkins on several occasions had been permitted to play on the Stradivarius, and it appeared to him that when he held the great instrument in his hand he became possessed of a new power, and that for a moment he was a true artist. Of course this belief was solely due to imagination, but in Hopkins it amounted to conviction, and his delusion may serve to extenuate slightly the very reprehensible conduct of which he was guilty, in connection with the matter. If he had only his cousin's fiddle to play on, Hopkins felt that he would be second to no violinist of the day, and by continually brooding over this idea, the resolve to obtain it at length matured him.

Before resorting to any stratagem in order to get possession of the Cremona, he resolved to make another effort to purchase it fairly. Accordingly, one evening, violin case in hand, on his return from some musical party, Hopkins called upon his cousin.

"You have been performing, I see," said Dell, glancing suspiciously at the fiddle case Hopkins was carrying.

"Well, yes," was the reply, spoken in a rather melancholy tone, "and as I was passing I thought I would look in and have one more sight of your Stradivarius."

This was no unusual request on Hopkins's part, and Dell smiled as he unlocked an old oak cabinet and produced the case wherein reposed his priceless treasure. Hopkins for a few moments regarded the fiddle in silent rapture, which he vainly tried to conceal.

Dell stood looking at him, and very naturally derived a good deal of satisfaction from his cousin's evident admiration.

"Shall we say £500 for it?" said Hopkins, at length.

"I should have thought that you had said that times enough already," replied Dell.

"Will you take £1,000 for it?"

"No, no," replied Dell, as he took the violin from his cousin's hands, and locked it up, lest the sight of it should encourage Hopkins to further extravagance. He whispered for a short time Hopkins' temptation with feelings of pride and sympathy.

"I have often told you," he said, "that my Cremona is not for sale. You have made me the best offer for it that I ever had, and indeed you have named a larger sum than has ever, I believe, been given for a fiddle. But mine is not to be bought if it were, Tom, my boy, you should have it. You need not be downhearted about the matter as you can easily get a Cremona for £500, at least a close instrument, though perhaps not quite so good as mine."

"But it is yours that I want," faltered Hopkins.

"And you see it is not to be had," rejoined his cousin, in a tone that sounded cruelly cynical to the other's ears.

Hopkins was silent for some time. He had done his utmost to get possession of the Cremona by fair means, and he was now trying to reconcile his conscience to the use of means, which, to use the very mildest term that can be applied to them, must be called unfair.

"I suppose," he said, at length, "that you have no objection if I bring in a friend some night to see it?"

"None in the world," replied Dell; "I shall be glad to see him."

On his way home, Hopkins, by various sophistries, tried to excuse the plan he had now resolved to adopt. What benefit, he said to himself, did Dell derive from the Cremona, seeing that he did not know one note from another, and would enjoy equally well hearing any other of the fiddles played on? It was a shame, almost a sin, for a man without musical taste to be the owner of perhaps the finest violin in the world. Besides, he did not intend to run away with the Cremona, like a thief, but if Dell ever discovered his stratagem, he would be ready to restore it. The consequences of the discovery, would doubtless be disagreeable, but the advantage was surely worth the risk. To remove any remaining qualms of conscience, Hopkins told himself that what he intended to do was merely to take the loan of the violin, without asking, leave of the possessor, who had really no need of it; he would keep it safely, and would in all probability return it after a few years, if the owner still refused the money he was ready to give.

Next day Hopkins went to the shop of Mr. Cupper, a well known violin maker. After a short conversation with the artist, whom he knew slightly, Hopkins said:

"I understand, Mr. Cupper, that you can make a very good copy of an old violin."

"Such a copy, sir, that you could not distinguish it from the original."

"Well," laughed Hopkins, "I won't come to you, Mr. Cupper, who I want to buy an old violin."

The violin maker did not take offence, but quietly retorted, for he was intelligent and could read Hopkins' face, that he had come to the business.

"What can I do for you, sir?" he asked.

"Well," replied Hopkins, "I have a friend of mine who has a Cremona of which I want you to make an exact fac-simile."

"Very good. Just look at that," said Mr. Cupper, handing Hopkins what appeared to be a model Italian violin.

"What a genuine Cremona!" said Hopkins, as soon as he took the instrument in his hands.

"If it is I can get the man who made it to make you one identically the same, for twenty-five pounds. Why, exclaimed Mr. Cupper, enthusiastically, "I am the only man alive who can copy the red amber varnish of Stradivarius, and I would rather have this than an inferior model for, between ourselves, it is cracked."

"You are the very man I want," said Hopkins, who was still admiring the counterfeit violin. "I dare say you have heard of Mr. Dell, my rich cousin?"

"Oh, we had the pleasure of doing business with the gentleman."

"He has a wonderfully fine Stradivarius."

"I have heard so, and have often wished I could get a sight of it."

"I have called on you to-day for the very purpose of letting you see it. Mr. Dell is my cousin, and as I have a great fancy to his Cremona, and he will not sell it, I want to get if possible, a fac-simile of it. As I can't buy it, I wish, as the next best thing, to have one precisely like it. Now, Mr. Dell, if he knew it, would not permit a copy of the violin to be made, so if I can do it to give the opportunity of examining it in his own house."

"That will be sufficient, the work of Stradivarius is so equal, and I am so well acquainted with it, that it will only be necessary for me to examine carefully Mr. Dell's Cremona, in order to produce an exact copy of it. I have a very good memory for particulars."

It was accordingly arranged that for a payment of twenty-five pounds Mr. Cupper should do the work that was required, and in night was set on which he was to accompany Hopkins to Dell's house, in order to inspect the Cremona.

"Of course," said Hopkins as he was leaving the shop, "you must keep this business a dead secret, as I wouldn't want it to reach Mr. Dell's ears."

Cupper replied by a wink, so know one that Hopkins almost thought he must have divined his stratagem. Cupper was evidently a clever man.

Dell was considerably surprised one night when Hopkins called on him accompanied by Mr. Cupper. The violin maker was not intimate with Dell, who, indeed, had good reason to remember him, because when less experienced than he now was, he had several times been imposed on by him in the matter of old violins. Dell, however, harbored no resentment, and, as usual, was pleased to show his Cremona. No one had ever examined the famous fiddle with greater attention than did Mr. Cupper, and it gave Dell genuine pleasure to see how absorbed his guest was in all its minutiae.

While Hopkins talked to his host in another part of the room, Cupper turned his back to their end and, taking a piece of some small slips of paper he had brought concealed in his hand. He was very particular in marking the position of a small wrinkle on the upper part of the neck. He carefully noted the places where the varnish was a little worn and in a number of small registered either on paper or on his memory, every mark which it was possible to identify the violin. Dell was unsuspecting and was in good spirits when at last he locked up his Cremona, thinking that Mr. Cupper's long inspection was only an additional tribute paid to its unique excellence.

A month later Hopkins called again at Mr. Cupper's shop as he had that morning received a note informing him that his commission had been executed.

Wonderful exclaimed Hopkins, when Cupper placed the "copy" in his hands. Why, bless my dickey, rubbed off in the same spots, and the very scratches on the belly. Wonderful! I believe I know his Cremona better than Dell himself and this would have deceived me!

At these words, spoken in some excitement, Cupper looked at Hopkins curiously, who did not, however, in his elation, notice the suspicious glance. Cupper had his account ready, and quickly dipping a pen in ink, made a slight alteration, unheeded by Hopkins.

"We said twenty-five pounds, I think," said Cupper, "but it has taken more work than I expected, so I have charged you a trifle additional, but I know you won't grudge thirty-five pounds."

"It is worth it," said Hopkins, and he filled out a check for the money, then he went away carrying his purchase in a case which Cupper lent him for the purpose.

After he had reached home, scruples again began to trouble Hopkins, respecting the scheme he was so successfully carrying out, but he soon dismissed them by the thought that Dell would find as much delight in the workmanship of Mr. Cupper, as in that of Stradivarius, where, in the interpretation of the Italian craftsman would now fulfil its mission of charming the world, instead of lying in ignoble disuse.
